LONDON, Oct. 20.—Au inquest was held o-day on the body of the supposed dynamiter who died yesterday in South London. It was ascertained that the man had been known as Joseph Cohen, but he was also known by the name of Brown. His landlady, Mrs. King, testified that Cohen had resided in her house, on the Lambeth road, for the past four months. She said that he was an invalid and seldom went out of the house. He received many visitors, who were apparently Americans.

Mirs. King testified that Cohen had suffered from bronchitis for the last fortnight, and had been very sick. On the 19th he had a friend sitting with him. After a little while the friend came down and asked Mrs. King to relieve him and go to the sick man. The man then left the house and Mrs. King went up stairs to Cohen's room, where she found the latter dead and his body still warm. This ended the landlady's testimony.

Commissioner Monroe, of the Datective Department, asked permission to examine the witnesses. The Commissioner explained that he believed Cohen an agent of the Clanna-Gasi, the head of which was General Millen, who was in London during the Queen's Jubileo. The London agent's name, the Commissioner said, is Melville.
